

How can a proactive approach save your business money? It gets better, you can actually Prosper from it!

Workplace accidents can have substantial direct costs (criminal and private prosecutions, prohibition or improvement notices, sick leave etc), and potentially even greater indirect costs (replacement of staff, re-training, admin and management involvement time etc).

By being proactive (having an up to date and detailed policy, risk assessments, workplace inspections and audits, regular safety meetings etc), rather than solely reactive (accident investigation, reacting to legislative changes & accident trend analysis etc), you will -

- increase key stakeholder confidence and therefore financial support.
- raise employee morale and in turn increase productivity.
- improve contract tenders leading to increased work opportunities.
- show a decrease in accident rates, and then reduce insurance premiums.

Good health and safety management isn't just about reducing the chances of being prosecuted or sued (though that's bad enough!), it's about you taking control and prospering from it!
